The Geysers of Yellowstone | Yellowstone Net
Geysers are hot springs that erupt periodically. The eruptions is the result of super-heated water below-ground becoming trapped in channels leading to the surface. The hottest temperatures are at the bottom of these channels (nearer the hot rock that heats the water) but the deep water cannot vaporize because of the weight of the water above. Instead, steam is sent upwards in bubbles. Yellowstone geyser erupts, vomiting decades worth of trash ...

Old Faithful, named by members of the 1870 Washburn Expedition, was once called Eternity's Timepiece because of the regularity of its eruptions. Despite the myth, this geyser has never erupted at exact hourly intervals, nor is it the largest or most regular geyser in Yellowstone. It does, however, erupt more frequently than any other of the large geysers.
