Are Pervious, Permeable, and Porous Pavers Really the Same?

Permeable pavers are composed of a layer of concrete or fired clay brick. The pavers are separated by joints filled with crushed aggregate. Permeable pavers are different from pervious and porous pavers in that rainwater passes around the paver opposed to through it.

Permeable Pavement Around Your Home | Unlock

Permeable pavers are manufactured to the same high-quality standards of all concrete paving stones. The shape of the paver allows for larger gaps between the stones which in turn permits water to rapidly drain through the surface into a base material that is open graded (meaning no fines as with traditional segmental paving). This base layer can accommodate a tremendous amount of water.
